However, for non-designers who want to do certain tasks, it's a useful tool with a robust online community and resources to help. You should be able to find everything you need to get started. UPDATE: The full Photoshop CS6 release is now available. Programming The third major platform for Mac computers is the environment in which all the others run. The Mac OS is Apple's primary operating system for their entire product line, which includes computers, iPods, tablets, smartphones and smart watches. The Mac OS is based on the BSD UNIX system, which was created in the late 1980's. BSD stands for Berkeley Software Distribution, and was created by the University of California, Berkeley. The Mac OS's display manager/window manager is called Quartz, and the Mac OS desktop metaphor is called Aqua. The Mac OS has a large number of file-system-related applications built-in, including the Finder. Most programs require a Mac OS X operating system to operate, but certain third party software is compatible with Mac OS 8.6 and above. Mac OS X also provides developer tools, including tools for OpenGL development and troubleshooting OpenGL graphics errors, which are explained in detail in "An In-Depth Look at OS X's OpenGL Kit." With the release of Mac OS X Lion, Apple also created the Carbon development platform, which they intended to continue using for future developer tools. By giving birth to Carbon, developers were already creating software for the next generation of the Mac OS, which would be based on the Cocoa graphical user interface. By the time Mac OS X Snow Leopard was released, developers were already making great strides in creating Mac OS X-specific software with Cocoa. Given this fact, Apple decided to stop using Carbon and concentrate on Cocoa development, and use Cocoa

Q: How to get a deeply nested list of valid values from a table with a list column I have a table structure like this: Table: script_config id | key | value -----
1 | foo | [1, 2, 3] 1 | bars | [1, 2, 3, 4] 1 | crumbs | [5, 6, 7] The script_config table stores configuration values for a third party script. There are several configuration values for the same key (foo), but each script config key has a different set of allowable values. For instance, foo could be any of the following: "config": { "foo": [1, 2, 3] } "config": { "foo": [1, 2, 3] } "config": { "foo": ["a", "b", "c"] } "config": { "foo": ["a", "b", "c"] } I want to create a query that will take the data above and show me the script_id and configuration key, as well as the list of values for that key. I can get the script_id and configuration key, but I can't seem to find the right SELECT statement to get the list of values. I've tried the following, but it seems to be ignoring all the other key/value pairs and just returning the first entry of the array for this key: SELECT s.script_id, s.configuration_key, GROUP_CONCAT(DISTINCT cv.value) FROM script_config AS s JOIN configuration AS cv ON cv.id = s.value GROUP BY s.script_id, s.configuration_key I need to return the following: | script_id | configuration_key | configuration_values
----- | 1 | foo | [1, 2, 3] | 1 | bars
